Notes for the 2016 business year

I. General Information on the annual accounts

The Company possesses as of the balance sheet closing date the size attributes of a medium sized corporation in the terms of section 267, paragraph 1 of the Commercial Code.

The structure of the balance sheet meets the requirements of section 266, paragraph 2 of the Commercial Code. Structure of the profit-and-loss account follows the total costs type of short-term results accounts pursuant to section 275, paragraph 2 of the Commercial Code. Both breakdowns remained the same as they were the previous year.

II. Accounting and valuation principles

Accounting of property, plant and equipment uses purchase costs minus scheduled depreciation. Depreciation is always taken out in accordance with the following customary operational useful life assumptions:

- Other plant, operating and office furnishings 1-10 years

Low-cost fixed asset items with individual purchasing costs up to EUR 410.00 net are fully depreciated in the year of purchase and written off as retired.

Receivables and other assets items are basically capitalised at their nominal values. For individual recognisable risks appropriate allowances were factored in.

Current assets are given with acquisition costs or lower marked value.

Liquid funds are given at their nominal values.

Provisions take all recognisable risks and uncertain liabilities into account and are in each case given in the amount that appears called for with a reasonable commercial assessment.

Provisions were set aside where they are necessary according to a reasonable commercial assessment in the order to cover existing or recognisable risks.

Payables have been recorded as liabilities at their repayment amount.

The conversation of business transactions in foreign currency is done for receivables at the buying rate as of the date of incurrence or with the higher rate as of the accounts closing date and with payables at the selling rate as of the date of incurrence or at the lower rate as of the accounts closing date.
